Dear Max:

Your letter describing the proposed MIT conference on "Science and Public Policy" sounds very interesting. Needless to say, if you feel that I can be of any value, I should be delighted to participate. I am sure that the sessions will be extremely valuable to me.

I shall attempt to put together a piece on what we can learn from the Russians. I am leaving in a few hours for the proposed technical discussions with the Russians in Geneva, so I was hoping to have some first-hand experience. However, the events of the last 24 hours leave this in some question and maybe all I will learn from the Russians is that they are unpredictable.

Someday you might let me know what are the rules for the papers, i.e., how long and do you wish something written in advance.

Looking forward to seeing you in the Fall.

Sincerely yours,
